CHAPTER XI.—CONTINUED. The three-century rule of Castile and Aragon was ended. The vellow and red of Spain were supplanted by the scarlet, white and blue of America, and in a new glory of its own "Old Glory" unfolded to the faintly rising breeze, and all along the curving shore and over the placid waters rang out the joyous, life-giving, heart-stirring notes of the Yankee

For long hours later there came launches, bancas and cascoes from fleet and shore. The debarkation of the cavalry began in the afternoon. They had left their horses at the Presidio, 6,000 miles away, and were troopers only in name. The officers who came as passengers got ashore in the course of the day and made their way to the Ayuntamiento to report their arrival and receive their assignments.

The Red Cross nurses looked in vain for the hospital launch that, it was supposed, would hasten to convey them to comfortable quarters adjoining the sick wards or convalescent camps. They listened with the deepest interest to the description of the assault of the 13th of August that made Merritt master of Manila, and the elders, masculine and feminine, who knew something of what battle meant when American was pitted against American, looked at each other in wonderment as they heard how much had been won at cost of Sandy Ray, kissing Marion good-by and promising to see Stuyvesant in the near future, went over the side with his troop and, landing at the stone dock at the foot of the Paseo de Santa Lucia, found himself trudging along at the head of his men under massive walls nearly three centuries old, bristling with antiquated, highly ornamented Spanish guns, and streaked with slime and vegetation, while along the high parapets across the moat thousands of Spanish soldiers squatted and stared at them in sullen apathy.

And even while she sat reflecting what would be the wiser course, the general himself followed the cardbearer, and that distinguished warrior, with all the honors of his victorious entry fresh upon him, inclined his handsome head and begged that he might present himself to the daughter of an old and cherished friend of cadet days, and seated himself by her side with hardly a glance at the array of surrounding femininity, and launched into reminiscence of "Billy Ray," as he was always called, and it was some little time before she could say:

Along the narrow sidewalks of the Escolta, already bordered by American signs-and saloons-and rendered even more than usually precarious by American drinks, the blueshirted boys wandered, open-eyed, marveling much to find 'twix' twelve and two the shutters up in all the shops not conducted, as were the bars, on the American plan, while from some, still more oriental, the sun and the shopper both were excluded four full hours, beginning at

HUMOR OF PHILLIPS BROOKS,

Little Flashes of Wit That Frequents ly Illuminated the Speeches of the Famous Divine,

It does not lessen the dignity of Phillips Brooks' memory to learn from his biographer, Alexander V. G. Allen, of Cambridge, that he had an abounding sense of humor-humor that crops out in a fund of anecdate, says Youth's Companion.

BRIDGET'S GRIEVANCE.

Found Herself Accused of Theft.

The wife of a clever detective is said to have powers nearly equal to those possessed by her husband, says London Tit-Bits. Not long ago she began to notice that sixpences and shillings were daily disappearing as if by magic from the "change purse" in which she kept silver for small purchases. She was inclined to suspect one of her two maids, a sullen Irish girl, but was unwilling to accuse her. After some thought she wrote on a slip of paper: "Neither Bridget nor Celia must take any money from this purse." This slip she put into the purse with some silver and awaited developments.

Two day's later Bridget came to her and gave "warning."

"What is the matter?" asked her mistress, innocently. "I'll be going to another place," said Bridget, vindictively, "and it's not stay in a house where I'm accused of stealing money out of a little ould purse that's nivver had more than half a suvran in it since I took service here!"
